The 'La Casa de Papel'/'Money Heist' Phenomenon

With so many streaming services nowadays, the number of TV shows is increasing at a very rapid pace. The American and British series are still dominating the landscape and make up the majority of the content on these platforms, but giant studios such as Netflix or Amazon Prime have started looking at ways to expand even further. And what better way to do that than to shift your focus on some original content from other countries? The so-called Spanish 'telenovelas' have been around for over two decades now and have always been a big hit with the national audience. However, they have never really made it out of Spain, with some minor exceptions here and there. The main issue? The language barrier. While English is universally known and people have grown accustomed to hearing it in movies and shows, Spanish, popular as it may be, is miles away from being even close to English when it comes to how many people speak or understand it. But what if a show is so well-marketed and it becomes so popular that the language is no longer a problem? That's the question to which Netflix found the best solution with none other than 'La Casa de Papel'/'Money Heist'. The show tells the story of a group of outcasts picked one by one by a genius mastermind who comes with an irresistible offer: to rob a bank. Sounds quite familiar, doesn't it? 'Ocean's 11' and 'The Italian Job' have already tackled this theme. But how is the Netflix series different? The bank robbery is more than meets the eye. It is actually a statement. 'To rise up against the system is reckless and idealistic – it's Don Quixote!' said Alex Pina, the creator of the series. Netflix saw the opportunity of turning this well-crafted yet rather unknown series into something greater. And so they did. 'La Casa de Papel'/'Money Heist' is now one of the most popular series around the world and the most popular non-English series ever. With the fifth and last season soon to premiere, new viewing records are expected to be broken by this now cultural phenomenon!
