Lewis Hamilton – The True British Prince

Formula 1 has undoubtedly been one of the most entertaining and dynamic sports of the past few decades. Ever since its inception in the 1950s, it has been constantly evolving, with cars becoming more powerful and faster than ever before.

Every generation has had its fair share of iconic drivers, with the likes of Alain Prost, Niki Lauda and Ayrton Senna amongst them, to name but a few. For the younger audience there is no name more synonymous with the sport than that of Michael Schumacher. The German is easily the most recognizable figure in the whole world of motorsport. More recently, however, ‘the Red Baron’, as he was once dubbed by the fans, has been dethroned and most of his records broken. The culprit? Lewis Hamilton.

The British driver has taken the world by storm ever since his debut in 2007 when he was on the brink of winning the championship, but ultimately lost to Kimi Räikkönen by just one point. The following year the odds turned in his favor and while driving for McLaren he managed to grab his first ever title. Considered by many the ‘next big thing’ in Formula 1, Hamilton began to dominate the sport like no other pilot had done before him. From 2014 to 2020 he won the drivers’ championship every single year (except for 2016, when the honor went to his partner, Nico Rosberg), managing to beat the record for most Grand Prix wins of 91, previously held by Schumacher. Mercedes, the constructor for which Hamilton is driving, has also established a dominance like no one had done before, becoming one of the most successful teams of all time.

With such a great panoply of achievements during his spectacular career, it doesn't seem like he is willing to stop any time soon. As the 2021 season is about to begin, every driver will be looking at the opportunity of knocking down the reigning champion from his pedestal. However, it's starting to seem less and less likely, as Hamilton looks in a better shape than ever before and has a clear mission: to become the first Formula 1 pilot to win eight championships.
